Hongkong, July 31st, 1889. Owcz more the Yellow River has burst its banks, devestating a large tract of country. and again justifying its appellation of "China's Sorrow." This time the scene of the calamity is in Shantung, some bundred and twenty miles from the mouth of the river. The breach that occurred in 1887 was at Cheng-chow, in Honan, and the scenes of the two disasters are therefore separated by several hundred miles. The Chinese succeeded in closing the Cheng-chow breach and bringnext U.S. dagship on this station. The Pensacola ing the vast stream back into the bed it had deserted. About at 7.15 p.m. on the 16th July a kerosene-laden lighter anchored just outside the mouth of the eastern camber caught fire, probably owing to the coolies on board smoking. If the cases that were first ignited had been pitched overboard, as we are assured there was no difficulty or danger in doing, the remainder of the cargo might have been saved. Howeve the coolies attempted to sink the boat, the resul being that in a short time burning kerosen pread along the bilges and the entire contents of the lighter were guickly a mass of flame The blazing oil spread over the water with incred ble rapidity, but was kept back from the camber by showers of sand thrown from boats that aproached as closely as mossible, and as the barning lighter was towed further out into the harbour and there sunk all danger to the craft in the camly eleven o'clock, and while they lasted lighted up a weird and beautiful effect.-- Hyogo News.

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS.

THE ABSENCE OF SINCERITY. One of the ways in which the nalive insincerity of the Chinese is most characteristically mani fested, is their demeanour towards children, who > Turkey has just lost her Old Parr. "Hadj Soliman Saba was the full title of the patri archal Mussulman who has gone to his rest after an earthly pilgrimage of 130 years. His descendants are many; but they are all of the third and succeeding generations. He had seven wives, all of whom, like his sons and daughters, died before him. There were six boys in the family to nine girls—a strange disproportion. This old Turk was vigorous and active up to the end of his extreme life. Hard work and simple living seem to have been the secret in enabling Saba to nearly double the allotted epon. He was a strictor vegetarian than many who are classed under that name. Except on occasions of high festival—and even then never oftener than twice a year—barley bread, beans and water made up his diet. He laboured in the fields as a farmer, living much in the open air. and wearing scarcely any clothes. A mattress of illness until three days before his death.

In his newly published "Reminiscences," Mr. Serjeant Robinson tells a good story of Maule very important and intricate case coming on in the House of Lords, and the Pears had summoned the judges to attend there to hear the Planting subject-matter argued by coursel and to give their opinions upon it. Follett was retained as counsel on one side and Maule on theother. Shortly before the case came on. Follett strolled into the kitchen of the House of Commons (to which the Bar had always access in the day-time) and called for a biscuit and a glass of sherry. To his surprise he saw Maule sitting at a table with a rumpsteak and huge flagou of stout before him, to the consumption of both of which he was applying himself with the most exemplary assiduity. Follett could not help expressing to his opponent his surprise at seeing him indulging in so solid and carnal a diet by way of a preparative for the task he was about to enter upon, and for which a clear unclouded brain was so essential. "As to clearness of brain." said Maule. 'I find that mine is too clear already. The truth is I am striving to bring my intellept down to a level with the capacity
